Directors' Notes

Mr. Chris Fallows:

Welcome to our first large-scale musical in two years! I love this show; it is surprising in its thoughtfulness. There are shows that deal with broad social issues that have important ideas for people to consider—Twelve Angry Jurors, The Grapes of Wrath, and To Kill a Mockingbird come to mind. Freaky Friday is more intimate, dealing with the barriers that separate teens and parents, the ways we choose pain over happiness. But there may not be any issue more important than our families. David O. McKay said, “No other success can compensate for failure in the home,” and while we can’t control the choices of others, we can decide whether our trials will bring us toward or away from the people we love. During the show, look for the ways Katherine and Ellie choose judgment over closeness, and when and how those choices change. Thinking about this show and working on it has given me an opportunity to examine how I choose to love my family. I hope this show gives you a reason to consider ways to create more joy in your home, no matter its strengths and weaknesses. Now, from our theatre family to you, enjoy Freaky Friday, thanks for coming!!!!

Mrs. Hillary Pedrotti

Welcome back to Heritage High School Rising Stars production of Disney’s Freaky Friday! It has been both invigorating and exhausting to return backstage and create something out of nothing for our audiences. Because it has been nearly two years since we closed our production of Little Mermaid and all our seniors graduated, this show’s crews have had a steep learning curve to be able to pick up where we left off. The crew heads have lead their respective crews and they have accomplished more than I could have hoped for. We added some new Prop Stars, built a brand-new Booth Crew, and trained kids to use tools, learn new technology, and generally get back in the swing of doing our absolute best to create a world on stage for our actors and audience. I am very proud of what they have accomplished and their willingness to support and love each other. Thank you for supporting our students and our program with your patronage. Enjoy the show!
